Bio: I did my PhD at the University of Derby (rhymes with Barbie) in the UK in 1999. I then worked on the faculty of the University of Derby (in the Psychology department) and the University of York (in the Health Sciences department) as a lecturer and senior lecturer.

My work has focussed, for the main part, on statistical modeling on aspects of health and mental health, using things like structural equation modeling and multilevel modeling.

I have also worked on methodological issues, of things like assessing fit in structural equation models, and designing randomized controlled trials. I've done a little work on teaching statistics as well.
